PURPOSE AND SUMMARY

On July 28, 2017, Representative Roger Williams introduced H.R. 3626 the “Bank Service Company Examination Act”. The legislation, as amended, would amend the Bank Service Company Act (BSCA) [P.L. 89–554] to enable the sharing of supervisory information with state banking or supervisory agencies and improve coordination with state banking agencies to avoid the duplication of examination activities, reporting requirements, and requests for information.

BACKGROUND AND NEED FOR LEGISLATION

Technology Service Providers (TSPs)<sup>1</sup> are used by banks to fulfill their day-to-day operations, including loan and deposit taking, payment processing, and assisting with cybersecurity. There are two types of TSPs, those that are separate businesses that partner with banks, and those that are organized by banks to provide services to banks. Federal and state financial regulators are able to examine TSPs for safety and soundness; however cooperative state-federal examination efforts are hampered by ambiguity in the current law when it comes to sharing supervisory information and exam results.

Along with promoting better communication among regulators, it is important to maintain the appropriate level of oversight for new risks to the financial system. The 2017 Annual Report of the Financial Stability Oversight Council (FSOC) notes that financial institutions increasingly rely on technology for greater efficiency and to improve their services.<sup>2</sup> With greater investment in technology and interconnectedness among platforms, however, is the potential for greater cybersecurity vulnerabilities. As the FSOC report concludes, “if severe enough, a cybersecurity failure could have systemic implications for the financial sector and the U.S. economy more broadly.”<sup>3</sup> For this reason, FSOC recommends enhanced coordination to “both reduce potentially conflicting and duplicative regulatory oversight and promote more consistency in cybersecurity.”<sup>4</sup> Specifically, the report recommends that “Congress pass legislation that . . . encourages coordination among the federal and state regulators in the oversight of [third-party service] providers.”<sup>5</sup> While access to new financial products and services as well as greater operating efficiency for financial institutions is positive, it is imperative that financial regulators are able to identify emerging risks when they develop. Increased exam coordination and information sharing ensure that no gaps exist where weaknesses can produce risks to the financial system.

CURRENT FEDERAL LAW GOVERNING BANK SERVICE COMPANIES

The Bank Service Company Act (BSCA), originally enacted in 1962, is the primary federal statute that governs TSPs and authorizes federal banking agencies to examine TSPs for the services they provide financial institutions to assess the potential risks they pose to individual client banks and the broader banking system.<sup>6</sup> Currently 38 state banking regulators are also able to examine TSPs under the authority of state law, with additional states indicating they may consider legislation; however the BSCA is silent on the ability of state and federal banking regulators to share discoveries from their exams of bank service companies, including TSPs. While the BSCA does not bar state regulators from participating in exams with federal regulators, the law has been interpreted as a barrier to information sharing and regulatory coordination. This has led to frustration from state and federal regulatory authorities over the inability to fully share exam information, which could reveal weaknesses of individual institutions and allow agencies to use their limited resources more effectively.

As the BSCA is silent about the ability to share examination information, Congress should amend the statute so as not to frustrate collaboration amongst financial regulators. Appropriate sharing of regulatory exams allows agencies to use their limited resources more effectively by avoiding duplicative examinations and unnecessary regulatory burden. The effective sharing of regulatory examination results among agencies reveals many of the risks and weaknesses of individual institutions as well as the larger banking system. The legislation, as amended, is explicit that it would amend the BSCA to enhance coordination, and does not grant authority to states where none exists otherwise. H.R. 3626 is smart legislation because the bill seeks to clarify any vagueness in the BSCA. And as the Conference of State Bank Supervisors commented, “State financial regulators have strongly advocated for legislation to enhance state and federal regulators’ ability to share information on banks’ technology vendors and coordinate exams. H.R. 3626 will make both state and federal oversight more efficient and effective and reduce regulatory burden.”

U.S. CONGRESS,
CONGRESSIONAL BUDGET OFFICE,
Washington, DC, September 4, 2018.

Hon. JEB HENSARLING,
Chairman, Committee on Financial Services,
House of Representatives, Washington, DC.

DEAR MR. CHAIRMAN: The Congressional Budget Office has prepared the enclosed cost estimate for H.R. 3626, the Bank Service Company Examination Coordination Act of 2017.

If you wish further details on this estimate, we will be pleased to provide them. The CBO staff contact is Sarah Puro.

Sincerely,

KEITH HALL,
Director.

Enclosure.

H.R. 3626—Bank Service Company Examination Coordination Act of 2017

H.R. 3626 would require the federal financial regulators, the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation (FDIC), the Office of the Comptroller of the Currency (OCC), and the Federal Reserve to coordinate with state banking regulators regarding their relationships and examinations of certain companies that banks contract with to perform services.

H.R. 3626 would impose small administrative costs on the federal financial regulators because they would be required to increase their current level of coordination with state banking regulators. Administrative costs to the FDIC and OCC are recorded in the budget as an increase in direct spending. However, those agencies are authorized to collect premiums and fees from the institutions they regulate in order to cover administrative expenses. Thus, the net cost to those agencies would be negligible. Costs incurred by the Federal Reserve reduce remittances to the Treasury, which are recorded in the budget as revenues. Using information from the affected regulators about any additional administrative costs to implement H.R. 3626, CBO estimates that the net budgetary effects would be insignificant over the 2019–2028 period.

Because enacting H.R. 3626 could affect direct spending and revenues; pay-as-you-go procedures apply.

CBO estimates that enacting H.R. 3626 would not significantly increase net direct spending or on-budget deficits in any of the four consecutive 10-year periods beginning in 2029.

H.R. 3626 contains no intergovernmental mandates as defined in the Unfunded Mandates Reform Act (UMRA).

If the FDIC and OCC increases fees to offset the costs associated with implementing the bill H.R. 3626 would increase the cost of an existing mandate on private entities required to pay those fees. CBO expects cost of the mandate would be well below the annual threshold for private-sector mandates established in UMRA ($160 million in 2018, adjusted annually for inflation).

The CBO staff contacts for this estimate are Sarah Puro (for federal costs) and Rachel Austin (for mandates). The estimate was reviewed by H. Samuel Papenfuss, Deputy Assistant Director for Budget Analysis.
